As an institution of higher learning, California Baptist University goes beyond classrooms and campus activities. Encouraging students to “live your purpose” requires a deep commitment to excellence and to service by both faculty and staff. Scholarship and Service allows a glimpse at just a few of the people on CBU’s campus who exemplify what it’s like to live your faith and do it with distinction.

It was challenging to narrow the publication to 40 pages. The list of faculty achievement is long, and Scholarship and Service offers just a taste. You’ll find a much more comprehensive list of research, later in this publication.

In addition, this publication contains added value by including video of faculty profiled in Scholarship and Service. When you read the article about Dr. Kyle Stewart’s research in theoretical galaxy formation, you can click the icon included at the end of the story and hear Dr. Stewart describe his findings to you. Click the icon included with Dr. Angela Butler’s story, and you’ll hear her play some of the music she’s researching on the harpsichord. Dr. Grace Ni’s video will demonstrate some of the human characteristics in the robots she programs.

You’ll also find articles about the service opportunities offered on CBU’s campus, led by dedicated faculty and staff. The flagship programs International Service Projects/United States Projects and Summer of Service are designed to give students an outlet to practice professional skills in the U.S. and overseas. Compassion Ministries has a similar purpose in the inland Southern California area.

The stories about service learning in music, engineering and kinesiology are just a few of the ways that CBU engages the community while giving students the opportunity to practice what they’re learning.

As a university committed to the Great Commission, CBU’s mission is to produce students who are (1) academically prepared, (2) biblically rooted, (3) globally minded and (4) equipped to serve. Behind each of those student outcomes stands people who demonstrate those qualities themselves. They are mentors and friends who challenge students to become individuals who will glorify God and distinguish themselves in the workplace and in the world. I invite you to meet some of them in this issue of Scholarship and Service.

May the Lord continue to bless!

Ronald L. Ellis, Ph.D.
President
Dr. Angela Brand Butler was preparing to perform for a Manitoba production of Romeo and Juliet in 2012 when the director of the play asked for authentic music for the Montague ball scene. Butler found the request wasn’t an easy one to fulfill.

“Finding dance music of the 16th century is not very difficult, but assigning any music specifically to Shakespeare or to a play is indeed troublesome,” she said.

That idea challenged her to begin research in 16th century instrumental music used in the performance of Shakespearean plays in the 16th and early 17th centuries. Her research proposal earned the California Baptist University Trustees’ Distinguished Scholar Award for 2013.

“We know the repertoire used in that time period,” she said. “We know the dance music and the vocal music from the 16th century but not the instrumental music that might have been used. The plays indicate where the musicians were supposed to play, and we know they paid musicians because we have listings of those people who were present. I want to find specifically what instrumental music they played. Hopefully, those notations have been made somewhere.”

Butler will use a sabbatical in the fall 2013 to study theater records at the Globe Theatre in London, the Oxford libraries and in Verona, Italy. Additionally, she has been accepted as a scholar at the Getty Museum in Los Angeles to examine private documents there. Butler hopes to culminate her research with a repertoire list of instrumental works performed during Shakespearean plays.

“I feel so fortunate to have the support of the university,” she said. “They’ve given me a sabbatical to conduct the research, as well as the Distinguished Scholar Award and faculty development funds to help with expenses.”

In February 2014, Butler will participate in a lecture series and perform a recital that demonstrates her findings.

CBU CONTRIBUTES MORE THAN 681,000 HOURS OF COMMUNITY SERVICE
California Baptist University students, faculty and staff contributed more than 681,000 hours of community service during 2012, with a monetary value of more than $16.8 million, according to Independent Sector, a Washington, D.C.-based advocacy group. Service areas included the Inland Empire area and the state of California, as well as across the nation and around the globe.

“Service is an integral part of the experience at CBU,” said Dr. Ronald L. Ellis, president of California Baptist University. “The commitment of students, faculty and staff to be involved in service activities represents a very practical application of one of the university’s core values: equipped to serve.”

Most of the service hours were a result of service learning in academic areas, where students applied what they are learning in their major areas. The Collinsworth School of Music accounted for a large share of the service learning hours through more than 400 concerts and vocal performances by about 400 students. The College of Engineering contributed the second largest number of service hours through a cross-cultural experience requirement in all of its major areas.

Many of the community service hours were a result of CBU’s flagship programs, administered through the Mobilization Office. International Service Projects, United States Projects and Summer of Service sent 422 volunteers to 20 countries last year.

“Under Dr. Ellis’ leadership, we commissioned our first teams in 1997,” said Kristen White, CBU director of global mobilization. “Our faculty and staff leaders seek to connect with and invest in students to challenge them to take their next step in engaging the world.”

Compassion Ministries, with oversight from the Office of Spiritual Life, also contributed service hours during the year through local ministries with the elderly, teens, children and the homeless.

One group of students working with the homeless said they want to be a stepping stone between area churches and various homeless programs.

with the people we encounter, with the goal of meeting their physical needs and eventually being able to share the gospel with them,” said Melody Henderson, a CBU student involved in the ministry. “Our desire is to be Jesus’ hands and feet in this community and to love the people around us as best we can.”

The combined efforts of 18 California Baptist University athletic teams helped raise 5,640 canned food items to be donated to charity.

“I am really proud of our athletes,” Dr. Micah Parker, director of athletics, said. “It’s important that they recognize how fortunate they are to have so much.”

The canned food drive was also a competition to see which team could raise the most cans per athlete. The cheer team won the competition by raising 1,866 cans, which averaged 50.43 per athlete. Men’s golf raised 487 cans, or 37.46 per athlete, the highest total of any men’s team.

“It was fun to see our teams talk about who was going to give more this year,” Parker said. “It is great to see them give back.”

The 5,640 cans were donated by CBU athletics to Set Free Ministries. In addition, the teams volunteered time at the local YMCA, worked with a food pantry, a toy drive and various sports clinics.

The Division of Institutional Advancement partnered with Keep Riverside Clean & Beautiful to work on a street beautification project. Staff worked with alumni volunteers to remove trash, weeds, debris, leaves and graffiti on a local street. In addition, a group of freshmen picked up trash at the city’s Don Derr Park as part of their FOCUS orientation group’s activities last fall.

Some of the community service hours came from service learning projects that enable students to use professional skills. Freshmen engineering majors worked on projects sponsored by the College of Engineering, and students from the School of Business contributed approximately 500 hours in free tax preparation for low income taxpayers and seniors in the Riverside community.

• The value of CBU’s community service was previously reported as $5.4 million, based on the minimum wage. That amount has been recalculated, based on Independent Sector’s estimates, which is widely used by non-profit organizations.
Dr. Kyle Stewart is a big picture guy—the biggest, in fact. His research in galaxy formation was published in The Astrophysical Journal in May and featured on NASA’s website. The article, titled Angular Momentum Acquisition in Galaxy Halos, challenges scientific thought about the way galaxies are formed.

“We used to think that gas flowing onto galaxies heated up and spun around the outskirts of the galaxy pretty chaotically, roughly in a spherical shape,” he said. “Then, we thought, it would eventually cool down and sink into the galaxy. We now see that, instead, it stays cold as it falls into the galaxy from filaments that resemble cosmic webs. These cold flows become more disk shaped around the galaxy outskirts rather than spherical and are spinning much faster than previously thought, which helps explain observed galaxies that have really big gas disks—much bigger than the disk of stars that we can see.”

Stewart, an assistant professor of physics at CBU, conducted the research with six other collaborators as a NASA postdoctoral fellow at California Institute of Technology’s Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. His study required a super-computer cluster to form pictures of how galaxies are born. Hundreds of processors ran four simulations over a six-month time period.

“I work with theoretical galaxy formations,” he said. “This involves putting all the laws of physics that we know into complex computer simulations and running them for months at a time. This lets us see how galaxies form over very long time scales. In the end, the goal is to compare these simulations with observations of real galaxies.”

Galaxy formation is still a relatively new field, Stewart says, so there’s much work to do to understand galactic origins.

“I plan to continue my research at CBU, furthering our understanding of how galaxies form,” he said. “Although the field of galaxy formation has made huge leaps forward in recent years, it’s still a relatively new field and there is a lot we just don’t know.”

At CBU, Stewart teaches basic astronomy, as well as physics for majors in science-related fields. His research enables him to answer student questions that go beyond the basic, including those related to biblical views of creation.

“I see our current understanding of astrophysics as very congruent with what the Bible teaches,” he said. “Energy, matter, space and time all had a beginning. God created the heavens. I’m just trying to figure out how.”
California Baptist University’s programs in International Service Projects, United States Projects and Summer of Service contributed more than 35,000 community service hours last year. Administered by the Mobilization Office (MOB), the programs celebrated their 15th year in 2011. In 2012, a record 422 participants worked in 20 countries.

“We refer to this as the hybrid model,” White said, “or ‘academics on missions.’ CBU is a leader in utilizing this approach, with more students involved in short-term service-learning projects than any other university working with the Southern Baptist International Mission Board.”

Several factors set CBU’s programs apart. One is the faculty and staff who... (Continued on pg. 16) are committed to challenge students to use their skills to engage people in other parts of the world. Second, CBU provides extensive training for students who serve in the U.S. and overseas.

“We meet them five to six months prior to departure, just after Thanksgiving,” White explained. “Throughout the spring semester, our MOB participants take part in more than 75 hours of training, including a 48-hour intensive training weekend in early February. Our goal is not just to prepare our students, staff, and faculty for challenges they might encounter on their journey, such as safety, security, culture shock and cross-cultural communication, but also to prepare them for a lifetime of ministry focused on joining what God is doing around the world among the nations.”

As each team leaves campus, they gather to pray with family and friends at the Kugel, a 10-ton granite globe inscribed with the Great Commission. “Our purpose statement is ‘investing in lives to develop followers of Jesus,’” White said. “If we only met ISP, USP and SOS participants at the Kugel to send them off in the summer, we would be known as a sending program. But because the Mobilization Office offers a discipleship program, we are much more than that.”

Dr. Ronald L. Ellis, CBU’s president, launched the initiative in 1997, when three teams were commissioned to serve in Ecuador, Russia and China. This year, more than 360 participants in 41 teams will work in 19 countries.
“CBU is committed to fulfilling Jesus’ mandate of the Great Commission ‘to go and make disciples of all nations.’”

DR. DANIEL SKUBIK
Legal issues of U.S. drone use
Neither the current White House administration nor the last has given good legal justification for the use of drones, according to Dr. Daniel Skubik, CBU professor of law, ethics and humanities. The unmanned aerial vehicles are used for surveillance and attacks on specific targets, primarily terrorists that are either Al Qaeda or Al Qaeda-related groups.

Skubik believes the U.S. use of drones is probably on good legal standing although some questions currently remain unanswered.

“Consider a scenario where a U.S. citizen is conducting terrorist activity on foreign soil,” he said. “How should the U.S. respond? One option is to leave the person alone and let them carry out the terrorist activity. Another response would be to put boots on the ground—bring in troops with weapons to apprehend the individual. The third option would be to send in a drone and take him out. When you consider the other alternatives, a drone would not involve endangering soldiers, and if the enemy shot it down, we would only be sacrificing the drone. Some would think that’s the best option.”

According to U.S. law, the president or internal agencies cannot engage in assassinations. Skubik says one related question would be that if a targeted individual is not on the battlefield, would killing that person qualify as an assassination? Also, in the international arena, a number of customary laws and treaty laws say that countries are not allowed to interfere with internal affairs of other nations without their permission.

“In the early years [of drone use], Pakistan gave explicit permission for the U.S. to conduct drone strikes to wipe out terrorist groups,” Skubik said. “Later, they stopped giving explicit permission, which amounted to implicit permission—meaning they didn’t really complain. Continued use of drones became a grey area in that case. Now, Pakistan is officially objecting, so the question becomes ‘will the Obama administration keep using force in Pakistan territory?’”

Skubik’s qualifications for examining the issues include a Ph.D. in philosophy from Australian National University and a law degree from UCLA Law School, as well as practice as an attorney specializing in international law. He conducted research on drones in the fall of 2012 while he was on sabbatical at Zirve University in Turkey. The university is home to one branch of a think tank, so he had opportunity to speak with policy makers from the Middle East.

“Many of them were from states where drones are most heavily used,” he said, “but there was a division of opinion about U.S. operations.”

Skubik believes it is important for the U.S. to resolve speculation while the country still leads in drone operations.

“Many other countries have drone programs, including Israel, Turkey, China and Saudi Arabia,” he said. “They look to the U.S. as an example. If we aren’t prepared to justify our own use of drones, it’s not clear how we can condone others to do so. For better or worse, what we say and do will have an impact on what other countries decide.”
A yellow packet of paper sits on a filing cabinet just inside the door of CBU’s Office of Spiritual Life. On it is a list of dozens of opportunities for students to get involved with in the inland Southern California community through Compassion Ministries.

The organization is all about showing students how to serve the Lord and CBU’s neighbors by raking leaves around Riverside, hugging a child during a vacation Bible school or removing graffiti from a wall.

Compassion Ministries is a branch of CBU's Office of Spiritual Life. Julie Dobbins, assistant director of chapel and Compassion Ministries, described the ministry as “taking the lessons and tools that we hope to provide through campus ministries and mobilize students to use them” around the city and the world.

While CBU also sends students abroad on International Service Projects, Compassion Ministries focuses on service opportunities available in Riverside and surrounding communities.

During the 2012-2013 academic year, 217 students participated in service trips to Los Angeles, Las Vegas and San Diego during Urban Excursions; assembled boxes for Operation Christmas Child through the Samaritan’s Purse; and cleaned up the city through the Keep Riverside Clean and Beautiful project. All in all, the groups completed more than 2,200 hours of service.

“Sometimes it is helpful to go to another city where you do not know anyone and are not familiar with anything to try and get that exposure to service,” Dobbins said. “That helps students realize that service is something they can do at home.”

Compassion Ministries does not require participants to be Christians. While the organization hopes to be an asset to student’s growth in that way, it primarily focuses on giving students the outlet and ways to serve the needs of the community.

“Students do not always have financial resources but they have the time (to serve),” Dobbins said.

She explained that the Compassion Ministries staff looks forward to more students entering their offices asking how they can use their specific talents for the Lord.

“It is really neat getting to see them try to figure out, ‘These are my gifts and passions that the Lord has given me. How can I use them?’”

DR. GRACE NI

Programming robots with human characteristics

It is a simple demonstration of cause and effect—simple, but also amazing. Just by clapping your hands, you can make a robot turn, recognize your face, wave ‘hi’ or call you by name.

Dr. Grace Ni, associate professor of electrical and computer engineering in the CBU College of Engineering, says robots increasingly are being programmed with more typically human characteristics.

“I see the trend for robots to co-exist with humans,” Ni said. “Robots can be more like co-workers, or they can be companions for people with disabilities, for children with autism or for the elderly.”

Ni said that people who are less technology savvy might be startled by unexpected reactions from robots. “We have to ask ‘how comfortable will the person be with the interaction?’” she said.

Ni earned bachelor’s and master’s degrees in electrical engineering from Xi’an Jiao Tong University in China and the National University of Singapore, respectively. In both programs, her research concentrated on controls. However, with her doctoral research in electrical and computer engineering at the University of Waterloo in Canada, she expanded her interests to telerobotics and haptics, or tactile sensation applied to computer applications, which led her to study robotic manipulations for virtual reality and telepresence with force/touch feedback.

“Robots are used for medical applications, in which the doctor can control the robot from a computer as it is doing minimally invasive surgery,” she said. “Also, in tele-rehab, a robot can help a stroke victim regain fine motor skills by allowing them to perform the same function over and over again, saving the patient both time and travel to a therapist’s office. The therapist can then read the resulting data and reprogram the robot for a new course of exercises.”

In the area of telehaptics, which employs the sense of touch over distance, robots in two geographic locations can allow humans in one place to actually feel objects that are located in another.

“It’s a matter of force or touch sensors installed on the remote robot,” she explained. “A haptic device, which is a small specialized robotic arm for force feedback purpose, then transfers sensory information to the human user.

Ni’s students learned about haptics firsthand by programming robots to differentiate between a cotton ball, a ping pong ball and a golf ball.

“The robot uses tactile sensors on its fingers to detect weight, stiffness and texture,” she said. “It was very good experience for the students.”
Students in CBU’s College of Engineering participate in community engagement in three ways. First, students are required to complete 25 hours of community service in their first year and a half in the program. Later, they must complete a cross-cultural experience, as well as a professional internship.

“We are all most human when we serve,” said Dr. Anthony Donaldson, dean of the College of Engineering. “As an academic community and as individuals, we look for ways to give to the community as engineers.”

Engineering students have contributed more than 10,000 hours of community service since the CBU College of Engineering was founded in 2007—more than 3,500 of those hours during 2012-2013. Opportunities are sent to them via e-mail by faculty, but students decide themselves how they want to serve. Typical choices include working with Habitat for Humanity, Free Wheelchair Mission, the MathCounts competition, science fairs, assisting with robotics clubs for schools and tutoring at Riverside’s Sherman Indian High School. Recently, 10 students dismantled a playground at Harvest Christian Fellowship in Riverside, transferred the equipment to a middle school and reassembled it.

In October 2012, about 100 students volunteered to work in Riverside’s Long Night of Arts and Innovation as the service arm for the event’s organizers. CBU had the largest representation of volunteers for the inaugural Long Night activities than any other participating organization.

Kaylie Carrasco, a junior engineering major, said it was her favorite community service experience.

“We got to know people attending the event, from students to teachers,” she said. “They asked us all kinds of questions. We found out more about them and they got to know more about us, including what we believe.”

Students also may choose to participate in one of the two Engineering Service Projects scheduled each year to fulfill the cross-cultural experience requirement.

Last year, six students and 12 alumni went to the mountains of rural East Asia to build a water storage and distribution system for residents there. Others traveled to Alabama to help build the infrastructure for a missionary training camp.

“We want students to develop perspective that is not limited by course requirements so that they can be good stewards of what they’ve been given,” Donaldson said.
DR. DENNIS BIDESHI AND DR. HYUN-WOO PARK:

Working to reduce threats by infected mosquitoes
Dr. Dennis Bideshi was 12 years old when he contracted dengue fever, a viral disease transmitted by mosquitoes. Now, as a California Baptist University professor of biology and licensed clinical microbiologist, he is working with a team of scientists to genetically engineer bacteria potentially able to suppress mosquitoes that transmit viral and parasitic diseases worldwide.

In addition to teaching classes, Bideshi works in a laboratory with Dr. Hyun-Woo Park, associate professor of biology at CBU, surrounded by test tubes and scribbled notes.

Their current work is with the bacterium, bacillus thuringiensis subspecies israelensis, which is found in natural habitats. The bacterium produces crystalline inclusions composed of proteins that are toxic to mosquito larvae.

The men are using this research in hopes of subduing the species of mosquitoes that transmits malaria, a deadly disease responsible for infecting 219 million people around the world and causing the deaths of 660,000 people annually.

The toxic crystal combinations the professors are developing were originally created more than 10 years ago. While the work can sometimes take years to see key developments, Bideshi said patience is just a part of being a scientist.

“To be a scientist you have to expect bad results,” Bideshi said. “The trick is designing things that might work and thinking from a different perspective. That is what I like about science—you have to think from a different perspective when all else fails.”

That different perspective and Park’s research has helped to create bacteria with toxic crystal combinations 10-30 times stronger than any microbial mosquito larvicide currently available on the market. The scientists are hoping to get one of their creations commercialized into a powder that would be mixed with water to form an environmentally safe biopesticide whose residue would degrade by natural processes.

“As you can guess, people said, ‘No, we don’t want to use any recombinants,’” Park said. “Right now, with the current proposal we will submit to the National Institute of Health, we are going to get rid of all the foreign genes from the recombinant so that it will be safe for the environment.”

CBU students also are participating in the experiments and developments. Each summer, the scientists enlist a handful of CBU students to help. Past students have even been able to publish papers on their findings from the summer work with the professors.

Bideshi and Park hope their research will lead to innovations that reduce the threats of insects like mosquitoes that transmit malaria, a disease more widespread than AIDS.
COLLINSWORTH SCHOOL OF MUSIC CHALLENGES STUDENTS TO PERFORM
Dr. Judd Bonner, dean of the Shelby and Ferne Collinsworth School of Music, believes that service learning is an integral part of the music curriculum. In addition to sharing music with the community, those experiences also help fine-tune performance skills.

“For the good of the student, they learn how to perform, get up in front of people and communicate,” Bonner said. “Over time, it becomes less stressful. They can be more natural and poised.”

About 450 student musicians participated in hundreds of performances at churches, schools and community events throughout California and across the nation during 2012. The number of performances available to student musicians is rare for an academic program, Bonner said. He wants students to have an abundance of opportunities to practice their skills.

“There is no way better to polish music than performing,” he said. “You can rehearse all you want, but you do not know how good it is going to be or what needs to be improved on until you get out and perform it.”

Bonner hopes the music school continues to be a face of the university in the community through its performances.

“We believe that music is for the masses, not just the elite,” Bonner said. “We are using it largely to lead worship and using it for the purpose of communicating and elevating.”

In addition to performances during the academic year, groups tour each summer to a variety of locations.

“As a teacher and conductor I can expect a great deal from my students,” Bonner added, “but routinely I find that these high expectations become part of their individual journey toward lives of excellence.”
Over the course of her 18 years at CBU, Dr. Amy Stumpf has taken some 40 students to the U.S. Capitol in Washington, D.C., in part, to lobby for trafficking laws such as the Trafficking Victims Protection Act and the Child Protection Compact Act. Stumpf also leads students to California’s capitol in Sacramento to push for anti-trafficking measures in a state that consistently ranks amongst the highest in the country for human trafficking.

Stumpf is associate professor of society and religion, as well as faculty advisor of the CBU’s International Justice Mission chapter.

While students often come to her wanting to take immediate action towards preventing and stopping human trafficking, Stumpf advocates informing the public about the issues and seasoning her efforts with prayer. “If (God) can’t trust you to pray, how can He trust you to do (anti-trafficking work)?” Stumpf said.

Outside of her anti-human trafficking work, Stumpf has headed up her own research about wives of preachers, a topic that interests her as a pastor’s wife herself. The idea grew out of existing data suggesting that the number one reason pastors leave their ministry is due to marriage issues. She was awarded the 2012 CBU Trustee’s Distinguished Scholar’s Award for her research proposal.

After nearly 30 hours of interviews with spouses of pastors, Stumpf and her research collaborator, Anna Gustafson, did not find what they anticipated. While a large percentage of the women held some type of professional position, Stumpf said they reported feelings of having no preparation for the roles they are given in churches. They also spoke of the negative effects church conflicts had on their personal and religious lives.

“Almost all the pastors’ wives agree that, for a woman, there is too much (of their life) in one basket,” Stumpf said.

However, 100 percent of the wives said they would still marry a pastor if they had the chance to do it all again. Stumpf concluded that specific experiences as a pastor’s wife are not affecting the wife’s overall view of her role with her husband.

“Pastors’ wives have a tremendous ability to differentiate between being the pastor’s wife in general and the specific experiences or church,” Stumpf said. “Time and time again, these women would tell me, ‘I love being a pastor’s wife. There is nothing I would rather do.’"
“Time and time again, these women would tell me ‘I love being a pastor’s wife.’”
DR. JEFF MCNAIR
 Integrating people with disabilities
Many churches are not doing a good job integrating people with disabilities, according to Dr. Jeff McNair, professor of education at California Baptist University.

“For the most part, the tradition of the church has been developed without the presence of people with disabilities, so the response is to reject those people who don’t fit into the system,” he said. “There needs to be a place for everyone in the church. Not that they need to be integrated in every place, but there needs to be a place for them.”

McNair earned a master of arts degree in special education from California State University at Los Angeles and a Ph.D. in special education from the University of Illinois at Champaign/Urbana. He also has partnered since 1988 with Joni & Friends International Disability Center, a ministry to the disabled coordinated by Joni Eareckson Tada, providing disability training in places like Serbia, Ukraine, the Netherlands, El Salvador and, most recently, in China.

“We worked with about 250 pastors in China to train them in disability ministry,” he said. “It hasn’t been a priority in the past. More churches are waking up and are more willing.”

McNair believes the problem with churches not ministering to the disabled is deep-seated.

“The social skills required are so much in demand that some churches would reject those without perfect social skills. Churches have even taken out restraining orders against those with disabilities to keep them away from their doors.”

One corrective measure would be to increase the presence of people with disabilities, McNair said.

“The first step is for the church to decide they want people with disabilities in their services,” he said. “Every step after that is logistics, but without that first step, everything else is just a pain in the neck.”

The key, he believes, is that congregations need to be more open and more service oriented, instead of focusing on social skills.

“The act of worship implies that I might help someone instead of sitting there in church being entertained,” he said. “The focus of worship shouldn’t be on cognitive knowledge but on faith development. People in church must have been fed in a particular way when they feel comfortable in saying they don’t have to care about people with disabilities.”

McNair says some students in his classes have grown up in church but have never had a conversation with a person with disabilities.

“I try to change that,” he said. “My wife and I have been involved with adults with intellectual disabilities for 40 years, so I introduce students to some of our friends. Nearly everyone in a disabled person’s life either has to be with them or are paid to be. Hardly anyone chooses to be a friend. It makes such a difference for a disabled person to realize that someone is truly interested in them.”
From jumping jacks to laps around a track, Dr. Trevor Gillum, assistant professor of kinesiology, is taking exercise to a whole new level—the cellular level.

Gillum is currently researching how exercise affects single cells and how those responses benefit a person from a cardiovascular and metabolic standpoint to prevent lifestyle diseases.

“Exercise is beneficial, and we should all engage in the appropriate amount,” Gillum said. “My research will not change that, but instead seeks to better understand this process.”

Gillum was drawn to his research because of the numerous fields of study necessary to understand what really goes on in a human body.

“I like to think of exercise physiology as a tapestry,” he said. “We draw upon anatomy, physiology, biochemistry, microbiology and pathology to better understand the form and function of the body.”

CBU students have been able to aid his research at all levels.

“Our goal is to give (students) an additional skill—the skill to work in a lab,” Gillum said. “This is often advantageous when applying to graduate programs. It also helps students apply classroom knowledge in a different setting and gives them a different view than the textbook.”

The biggest change in Gillum’s research since it began in 2009 has been the shift from being a doctoral student working in a laboratory full time to the life of a professor balancing office hours, lab work and teaching.

“Finding the time to both teach and research effectively is challenging, but it is one of the reasons I was drawn to CBU,” Gillum said. “In addition, I get great support from my department chair and dean.”

Gillum’s findings have already been published in publications such as The Biology of Sport. He said he continues his research with the hope of publishing future works on matters such as the difference in male and female responses to the same type and amount of exercise.
“Exercise is beneficial, and we should all engage in the appropriate amount. My research ... seeks to better understand this process.”
KINESIOLOGY STUDENTS STUDY MOTOR SKILL DEVELOPMENT AMONG THE ELDERLY
The Great Depression, World War II and advice on aging well were just a few topics kinesiology students learned about during a hands-on experience with elderly residents at Magnolia Village Independent Living.

The Kinesiology 332 Lifelong Motor Development course focuses on motor skill development across a person’s life. Students examine the physical, cognitive, emotional and social changes occurring in a human being and how it relates to motor skills. For class lecturer Lauri Hauck, the course offered a prime opportunity to interact with the elderly living directly across from the campus’s main entrance.

“Rather than interview their grandparents, I thought (the class) could reach out into the community and start to build a connection between the different generations that are right across the street from each other,” Hauck said. “... Every time we studied (motor development) research and theories, my goal was for the students to see it firsthand.”

Students had the opportunity to break into groups and speak with a resident of the village about his or her motor development throughout the years. While hearing stories related to their research, students also had the opportunity to learn general life lessons.

“I would do it again in a heartbeat,” said Nicole Haines, a CBU student who participated in the project. “I had so much fun getting to know Joan (one of the village’s residents) and hearing all her life stories. I learned so much from her in the short amount of time we spent talking. You could tell that (the residents) genuinely enjoyed having someone to talk to.”

Hauck said the experience surpassed her educational goals for the students.

“The students learned how to introduce themselves and talk to a person in a whole different generation,” she said. “Reaching out in the community and building a relationship with the older adults far surpassed any curriculum goal. Being able to witness the connections that each of them were making was a true blessing.”

Hauck plans to incorporate a visit to the senior village in future classes. The course also features an infant motor development lab, a fundamental lab with kindergarteners and a teen anthropometric lab before wrapping up the semester with the adult motor development lab.
Entrepreneurship as service to the community

DR. ANDY HERRITY
Entrepreneurship as service to the community
After college, Dr. Andrew Herrity started scraping up enough capital to form the Mission Savings Bank, which he hoped could finance the ventures of people other banks had turned away.

“It was really an outworking of ‘How do I give a cup of water to someone in Jesus’s name in my role as a banker?’” Herrity said.

As he helped people fund first homes, start businesses and simply practice good finances, Herrity discovered something important—he really enjoyed teaching others. Since 1993, Herrity has been putting his skills to use as a California Baptist University professor of business.

Herrity has also turned his passion for business into research. His studies focus on the discipline of entrepreneurship and why people pursue new ventures.

“From my perspective, an entrepreneur is someone starting a venture with an idea that will improve people’s lives by introducing something new,” Herrity said. “While a new venture can provide for the founder’s financial needs, I find almost every founder wants to help people transform their hopes and dreams into a better future.”

During Herrity’s sabbatical in the fall of 2012, he spent two months at the University of Cambridge in the United Kingdom studying entrepreneurship.

Upon returning, he interviewed 30 entrepreneurs in different age groups and industries in California’s Inland Empire, a region suffering from one of the nation’s highest unemployment rates.

The research resulted in a presentation presented to the Riverside Technology CEOs Forum, a summary submitted to the city of Riverside and a paper submitted to a scholarly conference.

“The project grew out of a personal desire to use my skills as scholar and researcher in Christian service to my neighbors,” Herrity said.

He also incorporates his work into the classroom. His spring 2013 courses featured a new class, The Entrepreneur, where students spent 10 weeks interacting with CBU alumni who shared their experiences, successes and failures as entrepreneurs.

“As a direct result of this type of first-hand learning, several students have started their own businesses,” Herrity said. “My hope is that my scholarly activities will help us all know how to do this better, that my service will help make the world a better place and that my teaching will help a new generation change the world.”
